

In an economy based on supply and demand, built on capitalism and priding itself on free and open trade, I find it appalling to think that a few large business owners could use the political system to squeeze out any newcomer who happens to have "built a better mousetrap." Please....do not tread on the rights of entrepreneurial freedoms. I believe that satellite radio, like all new technologies, has to be allowed to thrive or perish solely on the merit of the product...not because of artificial legislative restraints.
